GM RETIREE FLIES INDOORS AND OUT

Now that cold weather has arrived here in Michigan, where to you go to fly your radio-controlled airplanes and helicopters?

The church gym, of course!

Several days a week in good weather, you can find GM retiree Marv Thomson flying radio-controlled airplanes and helicopters in a 10-acre field in Grand Ledge, Michigan, as a member of the Capital Area Radio Drone Society (CARDS) of Lansing. But now it's time to move indoors – with micro-aircraft - to the church gym in Grand Ledge Baptist Church. The flying area is a full-size area high school basketball gym that easily accommodates one-to two-ounce all-electric aircraft and has additional room along the sides for spectators indoors.

Thomson flies airplanes weighing between one and two ounces. He also has Indoor helicopters weighing between one and four ounces and FPV drones that are flown by looking through goggles.

His outdoor aircraft includes five airplanes with 17- to 60-inch wingspans and eight helicopters with blades between 200 and 400 millimeters.

Thomson raced sports cars from 1967 to 1978, then switched to radio-controlled cars in 1978 and raced those through 2006. He took up the radio-controlled airplanes in 2007 and helicopters in 2012.

“Helicopters are more mechanical and more difficult to fly, and I like thing more Difficult,” Thomson. “and there’s quite a bit of technology that appeals to me as an engineer. I like the challenge of trying something new and learning.

Helicopters can take hours to set up on the computer. Gyros like those in cellphones Provide some of the control and make them easier to fly.

Thomson explained the attraction of flying aircraft to retirees: “it’s good for older people to keep their minds engaged and their bodies working well. This does it very much from learning to building. And there’s a lot of hand/eye coordination required.”

Thomson retired from GM Powertrain in Pontiac in 2005 after a 40-year career as a mechanical engineer. In addition to his hobby of flying radio-controlled aircraft, he served a two-year term on the GM Retirees Advisory Council and as a board member and past president and treasurer on the GM Lansing Salaried Retirees Club.
